

SUMMER READING CHALLENGE

Week 1: Indigenous Peoples Week

Novice Challenges

Land Acknowledgement

The city of Kingston sits on the traditional territories of the Anishinaabeg and Haudenosaunee peoples. Using a KFPL resource such as the Canadian Reference Centre, PressReader, or our non-fiction collection, tell us the current Indigenous name of this land, and how we might acknowledge the long history of Indigenous stewardship that has preserved it.

Intermediate Challenges

Indigenous Authors and Artists

During his acceptance speeches at the Polaris Prize and JUNO awards, Wolastoqi artist Jeremy Dutcher called on Canada to take heed of the Indigenous renaissance we are lucky to be experiencing right now. For this challenge, tell us about an indigenous author, artist, or musician whose work is available in our collection.

Advanced Challenges

Reconciliation

For Kingston's National Indigenous People's Day we created "Memory Hearts" to honour the survivors of the Indian residential school system and the rising epidemic of missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls in Canada. For this challenge, learn about Memory Hearts here, create one of your own, and tell us why you think it's important that we talk about reconciliation.

For Adults

Submit your completed challenges to the Circulation Desk at any KFPL branch.
